

School security is a big issue, as events in the recent past have forced school officials to come up with better ways of monitoring school grounds. Unfortunately, it is not enough to place hall monitors in strategic locations within the school anymore, as it is impossible for humans to always see what is going on at all times. In order to deter trouble, schools are looking towards advanced technology to help them keep their learning environments free from harm and their students and staff safe.

At CameraWATCH Corporation, we can help you design a school security system based on your individual needs. You may only require a few surveillance cameras placed in strategic locations, or you may need a more comprehensive system that allows you to keep a tighter watch of school grounds. We are highly knowledgeable of the latest technology solutions and we would be more than happy to sit down and discuss your options with you. Our goal is not to sell you the most expensive school security system available, but rather to listen to your needs and recommend solutions based on those needs.

School Security--Assessing Your Needs

There are many factors that go into assessing your needs in terms of school security. For instance, elementary and middle schools often have different security needs than high schools or even institutions of higher learning. If your school has been plagued by vandalism or violent threats from students or even nameless outsiders, then you might require a more complex system to catch these 'would-be' assailants before harm is done. Safety is key and our products and services can help you make sure that safety is maintained on school grounds at all times.

If, however, your biggest problem involves students sneaking out exit doors during the school day, you may only need cameras placed in trouble spots. Monitors that are kept in the school offices can allow officials to see who is coming in and who is trying to sneak out during the course of a day.
